WILCOX & GIBBS SEWING MACHINE.
We would call attention to the following facts in connection with this Machine, which renders it superior to any then in use
It forms a flat elastic seam which will not rip in wear,
It is entirely noiseless;
A patented device prevents its being turned backward.
The needle cannot be set wrong;
Can be used successfully without other instructions than accompany the Machine;
It received the Gold Medal of the American Institute in 1863. For particulars enquire of WELL SAID.—The following extracts are from a discourse recently delivered by Rev. J. H. Caldwell of Georgia. Commend these truthful and just remarks to the consideration of those who are laboring with all their might to restore slavery and bring back the remorseless despotism which is its concomitant wherever the institution exists.

"The slave power has ruled with absolute and despotic sway. It held the bodies of four millions of slaves in bondage, and at the same time maintained supremacy over the minds and consciences and speech of eight millions of whites. I used often to wonder why none of our bishops, or one of our distinguished divines, ever preached on the moral obligations of masters, while they often explained and enforced those of servants. The reason is plain—they were overawed by the slave power. It had uttered its mandates, and prescribed the metes and bounds of discussion. It had said in effect: 'Thus far, and no farther, may you go in criticising the conduct of masters. You may speak of the relation; call it a divine right; establish it in sermon, essay, and book, to be of God's own appointment and well pleasing in his sight. You may preach to the slave, and tell him his whole duty to his master—that he is to obey in all things—not with eye-service, as men pleasers, but doing the master's will with a good heart for this is required of him by his Master who is in heaven. But as to the practice of the master—as to his moral obligation—touch it lightly. You may say something about 'things that are just and equal,' but they must be understood to mean in some places, a half pound of meat per day, a peck of corn per week, a hat, blanket, pair of shoes, and three suits of clothing for a year. In other localities, as in lower Carolina and Georgia, you may mention all these except the hat. This must be about the range of your suggestions to masters; go beyond it, and you must be reminded that you are uttering sentiments disloyal to the slave power. As for education and marriage, separation of families and kindred, auction sales and negro marts, negro raisers and negro traders, cruel treatment and hard fare, they are not to be mentioned. These are matters pertaining to the civil law, and, being under that, you must obey the powers that be, for they are ordained by God.'

"Could the most absolute despotism on earth go beyond this in chaining down the human mind and conscience and speech? You may go to London, and, in Westminster or Hyde Park, criticise the behavior of the British sovereign; you may go to St. Petersburg, and speak about the Czar himself; but you could not stand on a foot of southern soil, and denounce our practice of slavery as immoral, without personal danger. Yet we say that we have been fighting for liberty, that we have free speech and a free press! We have had no such thing. We have been enslaved ourselves. Our minds, our speech, our consciences, our press, our pulpit, all were in abject dependence upon the slave power. I could to-day, perhaps, with the military power of the Federal Government established over me, and twenty thousand bayonets in the State to enforce its authority, openly pronounce that Government a tyranny without incurring the danger of personal violence; but I could not, when I stood here five years ago, have denounced our practice of slavery as tyrannical. I should have been forced to leave the State, if an infuriated mob had permitted me to escape.

"Have we not been enslaved, my brethren and countrymen? But we are now free! The same blow which struck off the manacles from the black man has liberated the mind and conscience of the white man."

CONFEDERATE SUICIDES.—The Southerners went into the war with the most unbounded confidence of success, and their disappointment at the result, being so entirely contrary to their anticipations, must have been terrible. A letter written by a Federal officer from Georgia last summer, stated that many people in that State, had died, and others had become insane, from mortification and chagrin at the idea of being compelled to submit to the Government. Judge Ruffin of Virginia, who fired the first gun on Sumter, committed suicide from the same cause, and probably others have done the same, the particulars of which have never been published. Not long since a party of Federal cavalry in Texas found the body of a rebel officer who had committed suicide. Near it was a piece of paper with the following writing: "The fall of my country breaks my heart. Heartbroken, among strangers, a beggar, now without a home. I want to die. This war robbed me of my fortune and now I have no fortune, friends or country—nothing to live for." There was no signature, and the insignia of rank had been torn from the collar, but the uniform was that of a field or general officer.

NEGRO COURTSHIP.—The Macon (Ga.) Messenger is responsible for the following illustration of negro life in the South:

We were very much amused yesterday as we overheard an 'unbleached gentleman' making love to an ebony colored Minerva. The conversation was something like this:

"Where you from woman?"

"I's from Jones, my name is Zylpha; where you from?"

"Oh, I's been round here a long time, and old Pete's gwyne to stay here, too."

"Pete's your name?"

"Yes. Is you married?"

"Does ye? I's no wife now, you's just de gal I's been looking for. Where's you stoppin?"

An explanation ensued as to the location, and after an affectionate embrace they separated to meet last night to have their nuptials celebrated. Pete was perfectly unconscious that he had to obtain a license like white persons before he could claim Zylpha for his lawful wife. We presume their pleasure was not disturbed by their ignorance of this "innovation," however.

MR. LINCOLN'S TOMB.—A correspondent, writing from Springfield, Illinois, says: "The tomb of Mr. Lincoln has been so often described that no fresh words of ours will increase the vividness of the picture. The remains are still unburied, and lie in the reception house, just as they came from Washington watered by the tears of a nation. A guard tent is pitched opposite to the house of the dead, on a rising knoll surrounded by trees. Three sentries guard the sacred remains night and day and the stone doors are kept open, so that air may circulate freely through the place. An iron gate protects the remains from a close intrusion, although one can see the two coffins—that of the father and that of the dear little son who was carried here from Washington with him to their final resting place. The grounds are very wild and beautiful, and capable of the greatest improvement as soon as the true landscape gardener shall appear. It is laid out in roads and lots and interspersed with patches of greenery and fine shrubs and beds of flowers. Streams of delicious water run through it, and birds sing in the grand old forest trees—the aborigines of nature. It is altogether as beautiful as the vale of Tempe described by Anacharsis.

CONTROVERSY.—This very good reason for avoiding controversy is taken from Dr. Holmes' Autocrat of the Breakfast Table: "If a fellow attacked my opinion in print would I reply? Not I. Do you think I don't understand what my friend the Professor long ago called the hydrostatic paradox of controversy? Don't know what that means? Well, I'll tell you. You know if you had a bent tube one arm of which was the size of a pipe stem and the other big enough to hold the ocean water would stand at the same height in one as the other. Controversy equalizes fools and wise men in the same way, and fools know it."

THISTLE KILLING.—A correspondent of the [illegible] Farmer, who has failed in destroying thistles that by mowing ordinary summer fallowing, has succeeded by repeated ploughings:

"Four years ago I ploughed about four acres, eight times, and I have not seen one thistle on that piece of ground since, excepting where they [illegible] out from the fence. The year following I ploughed a field six times over, and a few old ones came up the year after. Last summer we ploughed [illegible] three times and cultivated it several times with a cultivator. The last ploughing was [illegible] of September. I have walked over it since and have not seen one thistle make its appearance."

ELECTION IN NEW MEXICO.—The Congressional contest in New Mexico between Francisco Perea, late delegate, and Francisco Chavez, has resulted in the success of the latter by a majority of about [illegible]

WEDNESDAY MORNING, NOV. 15, 1865.

A Registry Law.

Many of the [illegible] are [illegible] at the coming [illegible] Registry Law. There are [illegible] how the [illegible] could be attained in the manner proposed. Those [illegible] want a Registry Law will not deny that [illegible] to prevent that class from [illegible] who bore arms against the Government in the late rebellion. It might be advisable to enact a law of this sort to prevent other abuses [illegible] such as are liable to occur in [illegible] communities like some which may be found in several parts of our State, but it is [illegible] that the greatest need for the law is to guard against the disloyal classes who were driven from their former homes on account of their rebellious acts, and who should they come into power here would be likely to involve the State in [illegible] similar to those which existed in other parts of that country during the rebellion. We cannot conceal from ourselves the fact that it would be an unspeakable calamity to Oregon for those persons who arrayed Missouri in rebellious arms against the Government, to succeed in obtaining power here. But though we have little or no fear of the result next June, we would like to see some way devised whereby rebels should not be permitted to enjoy the elective franchise in this State, either at the next election or at any future time. If this can be done, it is the duty of the Legislature to attend to it. It would be a precautionary measure for the future safety of the State and also a just punishment for the seditious men who brought on the great rebellion.

The details of Registration will be difficult, perhaps troublesome to manage in this State, owing to the sparseness of our population and the great size of some of our voting districts. Two or three methods of registering the names of voters might be suggested, but they are all open to considerable objections. If names are to be registered in each precinct, the process will be found quite an expensive one. If a Registrar, or Board of Registrars sit at but one place in each county, it will be a very great inconvenience to a considerable part of the electors to appear for the purpose of registering their names. In this, and a few other counties the inconvenience would not, indeed, be felt so much, but in the larger counties as those beyond the Cascade mountains, it would hardly be possible to apply the plan we are speaking of. If it should be thought advisable to provide for a Board of Registrars in each precinct, their sittings would have to continue longer than one day, since in the populous districts the whole number of votes could scarcely be registered in so short a time. This would make the expense of registration quite large. The object sought to be accomplished by the law, is, however a very important one and we doubt whether a few thousands [illegible] could be expended more wisely by the State than in preserving the purity of elections in this or some similar way.

It is hoped that if the legislature shall see fit to enact the law, the whole subject may be carefully and minutely considered. Hasty legislation on matters of grave importance ought to be especially avoided.

The point has been discussed to some extent throughout the State, as to whether a lesion of the Constitution will not follow the enactment of a Registry Law. This is a question of some difficulty, and one which ought to engage the attention of every Legislative member. The Copperheads rely upon the State Constitution to give every one of their fellow rebels now here, or who may hereafter come, a right to vote. Had this doctrine held true during the rebellion, then our State would have been entirely at the mercy of the marauders, if enough of them had only chosen to come to outvote us. Will any one say seriously, that while the rebellion lasted it was our duty to permit all rebels to vote who might come to our State? No one will claim so much. Had the Missouri rebels known that we were going to treat them so very considerately as this, they would have flocked in in sufficient numbers to have converted Oregon into a rebel State at once. Under these circumstances it would have been our duty to withhold the ballot from them. And if the right to do this existed then, it also exists now. The right inheres in every people to protect themselves. This is just what we propose to do by means of the law under consideration. The rebels have forfeited their rights as citizens, and hence when they arrive among us they cannot reasonably claim the privileges which our Constitution confers upon others.

Though we are of opinion that it is the right of the Legislature to pass such an act as we are speaking of we have some doubts whether the law would be entirely efficacious. It would be easy and natural for the rebel immigrants to commit perjury in order to obtain the right to vote. These fellows have never yet scrupled to take and violate an oath whenever they found it to their interest to do so. Many of them who have seen four years service in the rebellion, will swear they never bore arms against the Government. It is doubtful perhaps, whether it would be well to hold out before them the right to vote, as a reward for perjury.

If the Legislature shall decide to pass a Registry Law we hope they will give us the very best one that can be framed. We want a law which shall answer the purpose for which it may be intended—not one that can be obeyed or evaded at pleasure.

General Banks gives it as his opinion that if the political power of the South be given to leading rebels as the present course of the Government seems to indicate it will the result will be the destruction of free institutions and principles. With this view of Gen. Banks, the opinions of many of the most eminent statesmen entirely agree.

A fellow named McCall of Mendocino county California has sued General McDowell for $100,000 damages for unlawful imprisonment. The ghoul gave three cheers when he heard of the murder of President Lincoln. He may consider himself very fortunate that he escaped a justly deserved hanging.

General Grant denies that he ever said our Government would soon take initiatory steps to compel the French to leave Mexico. The story from the first was obviously a big canard. A man of General Grant's integrity would never be rude [illegible] enough to say such a thing even if it were true.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.—The Union Pacific Railroad is now completed from St. Louis to [illegible]. Next year another long section of the road will be built. The great highway is reaching [illegible] westward [illegible] and the Pacific ought to meet it [illegible] to our shores.

[illegible] to revive his well known [illegible] of former years. Perhaps he will take pains to prove [illegible] that the South is richer than the North in material resources and that cotton is still king.

ASHORE.—A report comes to us by telegraph to the effect that the brig [illegible] from San Francisco for Victoria has gone ashore near [illegible]. She had a large and valuable cargo on board.

[illegible] first speech of the [illegible]. After [illegible] Sherman and Sheridan [illegible] half million as are paupers—children without parents [illegible] Self interest will prompt the [illegible] of the [illegible] little experience [illegible] matter I might have that the [illegible] by leaving the question where [illegible] to the States themselves.

General [illegible] the allegation that his [illegible] by the President [illegible] regard to the [illegible] acceptance was written [illegible] instructions of the War Department but substantially his views [illegible] with those taken by the President.

The Philadelphia Press, a paper conducted by Hon. John W. Forney, speaks [illegible] recent letter of Hon. N. [illegible] Upham, of Boston, upon National Reconstruction:

[illegible] Upham author of the [illegible] article we copy from the Boston Daily [illegible] years a Democrat [illegible] New Hampshire [illegible] has every just and thoughtful [illegible] party relations [illegible] that they were making [illegible] with the whole Democratic [illegible] the government. He proposes [illegible] amendments to the Federal Constitution all of them important [illegible] essential to the successful working of the improved fundamental law. The [illegible] are:

I. [illegible]

II. Making the number of legal voters the basis of representation.

III. Securing civil rights to all without distinction of color and [illegible] guarantee clause of the Constitution.

[illegible] in these and kindred questions to argument [illegible] Judge Upham, evidently the result of careful and patient inquiry, will be read [illegible] with pleasure. We [illegible] with him in the judgment which regards the rebellion as having destroyed the organization of States [illegible] indeed we do not see that his comprehensive programme depends upon the [illegible] of that theory. But apart from that single point we heartily recommend this paper to the people. The proof that the abolition of slavery by the amendment of the National Constitution will add to the voting population of the South [illegible] ultimately increase the number of representatives from the [illegible] States is [illegible] made by Judge Upham and will startle many who had not carried their own investigation so closely and so far as that eminent gentleman.

On the 5th instant Gen. Pillow obtained an interview with the President and thanked him for the Executive clemency.

Madam La Vert also had an interview with Mr Johnson. Her mission [illegible] behalf of Gen Beauregard. In this connection a dispatch of the 7th says:

Several weeks ago a lady friend made application to the State Department for a passport for Gen. Beauregard that he might avail himself of the official order permitting such offenders to voluntarily exile themselves during the pleasure of the Government. But it is understood that the same Southern lady, who was to-day at the President's house is now interesting herself to procure for him the Executive clemency.

L. Pope Walker the first rebel Secretary of War and the man who first gave the order to fire on Sumter, has at last [illegible] pardon. He has been very persistent in his efforts, haunting the Executive Mansion, and forcing himself upon the President in advocacy of his own claims.

It is ascertained that the number of pardons granted up to and including October [illegible] was but 2,868. The machine is now in complete working order, and turns out between [illegible] pardons per day. It is proper to state that the Cabinet have declined to recommend the pardon of any of the excepted classes save those coming under the thirteenth exception known as the $20,000 class. The Attorney General makes no endorsement upon the applications of the other twelve classes and they are filed away separately for future consideration. When a person included in any of these classes is pardoned, it is done by the President upon his own responsibility and in the exercise of that Executive clemency for which he is not obliged to give a reason.

MORE INDIAN OUTRAGES.—We have news by the arrival of the Canyon City stage, of additional Indian outrages on the Canyon City road. On the 2d inst., three California cattle drovers were attacked while gathering up their cattle at a point between the John Day bridge and Cottonwood Creek [illegible] One was shot off his horse and only saved his life by taking refuge in the [illegible] the alarm [illegible] The Indians drove off [illegible] their cattle. [illegible] Camp Watson and the Indians [illegible] themselves [illegible] be defeated. Most of the men [illegible] off on escort duty, and Captain Small cannot make any move to chastise the savages without risking the Camp [illegible] When the stage reached Cottonwood Creek on the road down they found [illegible] learned that [illegible] them a few hours before [illegible] if five Indians were [illegible] horses [illegible] Indians attempted [illegible] stage but [illegible] drove the horses [illegible]

JAMES WATT'S WORKSHOP. — An Edinburgh gentleman attending the British Association at [illegible] describes a visit to the house of [illegible] the inventor of the steam engine.

[illegible] of Mr. [illegible] James Watt's [illegible] workshop [illegible] garret at the top of the house. It appears [illegible] [illegible] as he was sent to [illegible] exactly as Watt left it. [illegible] — Mr. Sumner has written a letter to the New York Post on the con[illegible] amendment [illegible] three fourths [illegible] the State [illegible] a part of the Constitution. He [illegible] Legislatures of three fourths of the several States [illegible] in support of this view [illegible] If the matter were one relating to any other subject than slavery, no legal person would ever doubt that, when there are States with Legislatures and States without Legislatures, and the Constitution [illegible] the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States [illegible] three fourths of the States which have Legislatures. In fact it does not require [illegible] to see the [illegible] the peculiar subject of slavery.

ARRIVAL OF THE REMAINS OF VICTIMS OF THE BROTHER JONATHAN DISASTER. — The steamer Del Norte arrived from Humboldt last evening with the remains of [illegible], Purser of the ill fated steamer and Charles H. Belden, Clerk of Major [illegible], Paymaster. The body of Mr. Mallet [illegible] Lodge, which was expected by the Del Norte, did not arrive. The funeral of Mr. Belden will probably take place to-morrow or on Monday. He was a young man of great promise and was [illegible] beloved by a wide circle of acquaintances. He was a native of Lockport, New York, and was the only son of a widowed mother, who remains behind to mourn her irreparable loss. He had been for two years in the Paymaster's Department, as clerk for Major R. C. Rail, and on that officer resigning, took the same position under Major E. W. Eddy, and started with him on his first and fatal trip to the North. He had gained for himself a reputation seldom attained by one so young, and will not soon be forgotten by those who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. — Alta, Oct. 28th.

OREGON SCENERY. — The scenery of Oregon and Washington Territory has peculiar attractions for artists. The grand proportions of the mountains, the luxuriance and beautiful tints of their foliage which they owe to a moist climate, and the sublimity of their snow covered peaks visible at immense distances are sufficient to account for the many artistic pilgrimages that have been made in that direction, Bierstadt, one of the best American painters, has made the scenery of Oregon famous by his picture of Mount Hood, which he is now exhibiting in the Atlantic cities, and for which he is said to have refused $20,000. During the present season several other artists have been sketching up the Columbia, and among them Mr. Bulman of this city, who returned on Saturday with fifteen or twenty sketches of much merit, including several of Mount Hood and one of Mount Adams. He intends to paint a large picture of Mount Hood, 4½ by 7 feet in size. Some of his Oregon landscapes may be sent East. — S. F. Bulletin.

DESOLATION OF THE SOUTH. — In the resumption of mail service in the South, continued evidence of the desolation of the land by the rebellion is brought out. An employee of the Post Office Department, now superintending mail matters in Arkansas, writes that "on the mail route from Fort Smith, in that State, to Caswell, in Missouri, there is not a house nor habitation where a mail carrier could refresh himself or beast in a distance of nearly two hundred miles. From Fayetteville to Caswell by the old mail road, the distance is seventy-five miles, and there is not a house or garden fence left standing, nor a field under cultivation. Throughout the whole State the restoration of postal service is hailed with delight and thanks.

Some idea of the terrible havoc of war may be gained from the following figures. In the desperate encounter at Chickamauga, Rosecrans lost 16,851 men, and at Murfreesborough 12,055; at Pittsburg Landing Grant lost 11,5[illegible]; at Vicksburg 9,87[illegible], and at Mission Ridge 7,000. At Gaines's Mills, Peach Orchard, Savage Station, Glendale, White Oak Swamp, and Malvern Hill, McClellan lost 70,000, and at Antietam 11,426. Hooker lost in his campaign [illegible] the Wilderness 20,000. Burnside at Fredericksburg 13,000 and Grant's united losses, from the time of crossing the Rapidan in his final campaign to the surrender of Lee, are computed at 90,000.

ADVENTUROUS TRAVELERS. — A party composed of Count Thun and his servant, Major Prossig and Major Pierce, will leave this city next week in the Hamburg bark [illegible] bound to Callao, whence they will start overland through [illegible] and [illegible] through Paraguay for Rio Janeiro, where they expect to arrive next Spring. A large portion of their journey will be through country seldom visited by Europeans, and some of it entirely unexplored. All of them are travelers of experience and men willing to [illegible] into the hardships, privations and dangers which such a trip implies. — Alta.

NEW YORK BROKERS. [illegible] from the National Government the sum of $[illegible] [illegible] New York [illegible] for the year [illegible] [illegible] Company [illegible] the State. — N. Y. Evening Post, Oct. 16.

Josh Billings says of the servants at Long Branch: "Most of em are black, but many ov em have lived so long among the whites that they [illegible] to adopt our kuller."

Mercy [illegible] is never so [illegible] as [illegible] to interpose for the impenitent. Her tears are not for those who persist in their evil [illegible] but for the penitent alone.

A Lift in the World: A Tale of Love and Ladders

From All the Year Round.

I came home by Ostend. The morning on which I got down to the port was a very "stiff" one, and the packet lay out in the harbor. We had to get on board in boats. We got to the boat by a rather dangerous and very slippery ladder. I got down safely and saw that a fresh, gay, young lady in screams of laughter was following in it, that natural embarrassment about her dress which is always to attend on the operations of ladies descending ladders or companion stairs. She had a dressing case in one hand, a gepack, as the Germans have it, of shawls and cloaks in the other, and she came down facing the audience. I ran to get up to her assistance, kept the boat well down, and though I was rising and falling like a fisherman's float owing to the rocking of the boat, I fancied I performed a real service. Her dressing case was stowed away under a bench with the assistance of a lurch, the young lady herself was settled into her seat with much laughter and enjoyment. A few miserable looking passengers—ghastly by anticipation—looking with disgust on the raw sea and open boat, and accepting the ladder as though it was the ladder of a scaffold, were assisted down and then the boat spreading an Indian ink covered sail, began to sway and roll through the waters.

The little incident of a dressing case and the descent of the ladder was quite sufficient to justify a traveling intimacy. We were delightfully pleasant during that little voyage in the open boat. She was a hoyden, and wished the sail to be stretched tightly so as "to make the boat," she said, "lean over." The sailors were inclined to gratify her admiring her spirit and relish for nautical matters. But the rueful passengers all already ill, whose traveling caps seemed like night caps of invalids, protested with anger and surliness against any such tricks. We both laughed more and more, and when we got to the delicate looking, airy, little French steamer which was lying far out, we were in high good humor with each other. I thought that she was traveling alone, but it turned out that she was to meet her brother on board, who was to come off with the next open boat with all the luggage. While we waited for him, leaning over the bulwarks of the ship, she with her parasol up, and both of us looking across the sea towards the shore, she told me a few particulars about herself. Her name was Flora Darling; she was coming from a French school near Paris, that is to say, from a school where English young ladies were taken in, and which was kept by Miss Tweaker, who in Bradshaw's Guide could proudly refer to the Rev. Rupert Twells, chaplain at the embassy, to the Rev. Beaver Bowler, chaplain at the watering places, and to the Lord Bishop of Sloper's Island. How old was her brother? I asked, that is, Miss Darling's brother?

"Only fourteen," she said. "Scarcely a chaperone," she added, with a burst of laughter, "only a few months from the nursery. There was no harm in it. One could do anything traveling, you know."

"To be sure," I said. "Darling—Darling!"

She started.

"I was repeating your name," I said, smiling. "A charming one—so musical and melodious—Darling! I shall be saying it in the carriage all the way up to town—Darling." (I put the very slightest ghost of a pause between the two last words.) As it was, she looked at me curiously, and burst out laughing.

"You say it so funnily," she said. "I half suspect you are very wicked. It's a pity, isn't it, that I must lose it one day? So they tell me. It's in the natural course of things, you know."

"Inevitable," I said. "You must lose it, Darling—the name, I mean. It would be no more nature," I added, fervently, "for you to retain that name than that—you could fly backward through that water to the town over there." (I was a little hard set for a comparison, but this did fairly well.)

"I was very near flying backward down the steps," she said, with a burst of laughter, "only for you."

"Yes," I said, "I believe I had the happiness of saving you, Darling."

"Now," she said, in a grave voice, "I must interdict your using that name of mine, for fear of any mistakes."

"You do me wrong," I said. "Your brother—I was speaking of him. He is a Darling, too, is he not? At least in his way I mean," I added hastily amending my speech for fear she should think I put any one on the same level with herself.

The brother was a cub. He was about as intelligent and as useful as a walking stick. No better choice could have been made. We might talk all the way up to town as if we were alone. We had a pleasant voyage. The rest of the passengers were very unwell, which contributed a good deal to the pleasantness, for we were both perfectly well and laughed a good deal at their sufferings. We got to Dover, landed—this time without boats (which I was a little sorry for, as I had begun to like that operation of descending ladders)—and passed the Customs successfully. The Darling gave me her keys, which, through my skill and adroitness—that is to say, powers of corruption—were rendered quite unnecessary. We passed a splendid examination (as she put it comically, seated in the carriage), while the miserable passengers who had been ill were reeling about, mistaking the Customs for their trunks, and the officers for sailors. She told me in confidence some details. Where was she going to in town? To that new great hotel just opened, where they could "put up" four hundred beds, and where there was the ladies' sitting room decorated in the Arabesque manner by Owen Jones, and where there was a pneumatic hoist which—— It sounded like a dream. Had I not heard all this before? and my prospectus reading of two years occurred to me.

"You mean," I said, "the Grand Metropolitan Limited, in forty thousand shares, of five pounds each. So much paid up. Why, it was only talked off then."

"It is a good deal talked of now," said a gentleman with whiskers like a plate brusher—"About the finest thing in London. People go there who don't want to go to a hotel—who are actually at another hotel. Merely for the luxury of the thing. It is marvelous, the perfection they have brought the thing to. So many thousand tons of water on the roof."

"I think I shall go there, too," I said, enthusiastically. "I have a lodging secured already, but I would far sooner go to such a hotel—where the darling—I mean Mrs Darling—goes too." She asked me then how long I was to stay in London. I replied, "An indefinite time," that it might stretch from a day to a year. On which she told me that she was determined to enjoy herself until, at least, her uncle came up from the country to fetch her. That would be in a week or ten days or a fortnight—she did not care how far off. "If," said I, gravely, "in the absence of your uncle, a third person would be of any use to you, or, I should rather say, if you would allow that person to make himself useful to you during your stay in the great metropolis, you would be conferring a favor on him—a real favor I think," I added, "as the inmate of the same hotel—the probable inmate—he has some claim upon you. In this life, surely, we should all help one another a little."

A curious light came into her eyes. She was going to reply favorably, when suddenly she gave a start, half jumped up and clapped her hands.

"Why, there he is," she cried in delight, "call to him! stop him! bring him to me!"

I went reluctantly to the window, and looked up and down.

"I can't see him," I said. "I don't see any one."

"To be sure, there he is," she said, impatiently and going to the window herself. "There! Mr Ridley, come here."

A man in a slate-colored tunic, turned up in the worst taste with orange and carrying a rifle looked back. He was the plainest creature I ever saw, and I was quite smooth shaved. He came running up.

"Ah!" he said, "is that you? What a surprise!"

"Isn't it?" she said, "And who'd ever have thought of meeting you here? Go in, will you? Oh! room you will."

"I have got this musket and bag. Government [illegible] so you must be careful, you know, but if you will have at all—"

"I am afraid," I said, "we could scarcely accommodate both you and your weapon. There is a large party coming back, a family, and if they find their seats gone—"

"Nonsense," he said, "why didn't they keep them? At all events you can tell them you did your best to keep them, and that I took them." And on that he came pushing in with his heavy gun and bag, which kept dropping on the ground, to the great risk of our feet.

"Here," said he, at last sitting down between me and her and fanning his hot tan face with his handkerchief. "There we are. This is an uncommon one, I can tell you. Did I ever think, when I turned out of my bed this morning—which by the way was at five o'clock—that all this was in store for me? I did not, indeed." And he burst into the most objectionable of all laughs known as the "guffaw" or horse laugh. He was carrying his great musket between his knees, and I saw that his fingers were still black with powder. "We had a field day to-day," he went on, "and a rifle match against the Royal Whitechapel Fusiliers. Licked them soundly. What could you expect from Whitechapel? I am so tired and hungry. You haven't the little sandwich box [illegible] the old sandwich box? No, I thought not."

"No," she said, "but I am so glad we met—we shall have such fun. And (to Ridley)"—the way she familiarly addressed a gentleman by his surname—"Mr Ridley, I am going to stay in London for a week at the great new hotel, you know—what do you call it?"

It will have been observed that all this time I was in a manner passed over, that I had sunk into an inglorious obscurity, being precipitated from my former prosperity. Feeling this wanton degradation very acutely, I saw an opportunity here and struck in.

"Yes," she said, "it's all the same, I believe."

For the first time he looked at me straight, beginning with my boots and so on upwards. Presently he whispered to her with a curious smile, or she whispered to him and smiled. During the whole of the rest of the journey to London they talked and chattered and whispered in this confidential way. Near the end I think she got ashamed of the ungrateful way in which she was behaving to me. After all, I had laid her under some obligation as regards the dressing case and that lesson of the ladder. But it was no matter. When the coarse Ridley got out at stations—which he did at nearly every one to fill what he called his "pocket pistol"—we got on again into the old friendly footing. I began to think she was a little intimidated by his presence.

We arrived in London. "We can wait here," I said to her, "and Tommy shall get us a cab." I had got my own luggage very quickly and it lay on the ground beside me. I had also secured the dressing case to which I had certainly a little claim for past services. Suddenly the hated Ridley looked in. "Your cab is [illegible]," he said. "Here. Give it me. Thank you."

I resisted this attempt. "I beg your pardon," I said. "I have a sort of claim, have I not?" I said to her, with a half smile.

"Good gracious!" she said, "how? Uncle bought it for me when I went to school."

"Oh, I don't mean that," I said. "I mean coming down the ladder—you recollect."

"What the devil do you mean," he said roughly. "Give the lady her case and [illegible] it," and with a sudden jerk he snatched it from me. She saw the reproachful look in my face. "I am so much obliged to you," she said. "I mistook, you know."

Here was the cab. They got in. I stood by, waiting, looking with a strange expression at the seat. "We are all going to the same hotel," I said, "the Metropolitan Palace, Limited—not as to room certainly, according to all accounts," I added, repeating my little joke to mollify him.

"Exactly," he said, "I think we have everything in now. Would you tell the fellow Metropolitan Hotel?"

"I see there is one vacant place," I said reproachfully to her.

"Go on," he called, and they did go on.

We went to the same hotel. I was ravished as the French say, with the magnificence of its proportions and decorations. But that was only the first feeling. Another and another of another sort altogether, succeeded almost immediately. That feeling was her—or she (which should it be)? The fatal dressing case, and the more fatal descent down the ladder into the boat had done its work, and had made me more or less indifferent to Owen Jones and his Arabian work, to the four hundred beds which had been "put up" and even to the "hoist" or "lift," which moved by hydraulic power.

Ah! the lift. I am coming to that now. I used to meet her constantly in the great dining room (where I never could get place near her). She was always kind and good to me, but she was always with that Ridley. I am inclined to believe now that the odious volunteer exercised a terrorism over her, the effect of which she had too much self respect to let me see. He was living there, so was Tommy. She was living there, so was I. I may as well confess it now, I used to lie in wait for her in the hall on all manner of flimsy pretexts, either until she came down, or came in, or came up. But whether she came down or came up, somehow that Ridley fellow always contrived to thrust himself upon her. By some intriguing he managed to sit beside her at the dinners. No doubt she rebelled against this tyranny and persecution. Meanwhile, my life was becoming almost intolerable from agitation and struggle, and I felt it must end in some way—not life, but the state of things generally.

I have spoken of coming up and of going down, and I have avoided hitherto coming directly to that portion of the narrative. There hangs thereby more than would be conceived—more certainly hangs, than the simple chamber which the mysterious agency of science, as manifested in the hydraulic apparatus, raised so many times in the day to the top of the house. I have alluded before to the cruel pulmonary infirmity to which I was a sufferer, and which unfortunately about this time began to be more troublesome than usual. The house was very full and I had to be content with a chamber very near to the roof, a region which would have been practically unattainable by me but for the blessings of modern science. The "lift" was my salvation—my pulmonary salvation. I enjoyed my rides in the lift and relished the mode of traveling so much that I made it the excuse for many journeys to and from my room. But there was yet another meaning in it. She, like most other guests, availed herself of it. Am I followed now? And when I was lying in wait as I may call it in the hall, I confess to a little artifice. When she had entered the apparatus I used to emerge, feign having forgotten a pocket handkerchief or some other article, and would be transported in her delightful society up to the roof. It was charming. I could have gone up and down from year's end to year's end, without even getting out. But that, of course could not be. At last it all came to an end, and the lift—a cursed invention—was at the bottom of it. I mean morally. Here are the particulars.

The very first journey we had made together he was there, too, looking at me with undisguised insolence and jealousy. She had called out, with great laughing and clapping of hands, "I say, Ridley, Ridley! What a place to make a proposal in! Fancy two people shut up in here together!"

He laughed loudly. "A good idea," he said, "worth making a note of."

"Not at all a bad idea," I said, from a corner of the lift.

He looked at me as he always did when I spoke.

"The only difficulty," he said, "is that under certain circumstances it is almost impossible for two people to get the opportunity of being alone. There are busy bodies who will always be sticking themselves in where they are not wanted, and to whom, I think, for the good of the house, even, I must give a lesson."

"As for that," I said smiling, "so despotic a course would scarcely be tolerated. The lift, as we all knew, is public like a weighing machine—or the pavement of Regent street. The proprietor might as well shut up as introduce any restriction of the kind you allude to." He burst out laughing to hide the effect of my quiet retort. She laughed, too. "You see," I said to her, "his plan would scarcely answer."

"I shall think of something that will, though," he said.

In a few days however, there was a curious change. When she came into the hall with him, and while I was lying in wait until she should have entered the lift, she suddenly turned and said, "Oh! that machine is too troublesome. The stairs are twice as fast. What do you say to a race, Ridley?" And off she bounded with that person in pursuit. For the moment, my instinct was to follow also, but a few steps at a rapid pace soon showed me that I must stop. The pulmonary affection developed itself in a second, and at the end of the first flight, I was panting in deep distress. I grieve to say that under the instigation of Ridley she carried out his unworthy tactics steadily on every occasion. They always went up by the stairs, and as a matter of habit, avoided the lift. I had to make a weary journey by the hydraulic agency. One evening, however, I found that I could bear it no longer. I said to myself that it must come to a crisis, one way or the other. Which was the one way or which was the other way, I did not know and did not care, but the way should be discovered. As I was brooding over this, the idea suddenly flashed upon me. What if the pulmonary affection were not surmounted? What if I braced the efforts, tried—went into training a little? I might baffle it and be once more on equal terms with the enemy.

I almost at once began to act on the suggestion with a little practice. I found my power of endurance improving marvelously. I progressed in a steady ratio. To my surprise, I found that when I could effect two flights of stairs one day, I could manage three the following day. This promised well. And, the better to carry out my design I determined to keep my training, as I might call it, a secret, until I was perfect—which was on a Sunday—the news came to me that she was going away, that her uncle had written for her and that she must leave by the four o'clock train. She did not tell me this herself but I overheard her telling it to her Ridley friend. No time therefore was to be lost. Whatever I had to do had best be done, if it were to be done, quickly. This is not the precise form of words used by the immortal William, but it conveys his idea pretty accurately. In a moment I had the plan settled. Nearly the whole day I waited in or about the hall for her to come in. I had determined, in a word—bearing in mind the remarks so disparaging to a faint heart—to be bold and speak. I was in ambuscade. I say the whole day in or about the hall rushing out of concealment whenever I heard any one coming. I believe the young lady who looked after the books and accounts at first thought I had designs on the property under her care, but afterward fancied I was a little "touched" in the upper story. I could almost laugh at this situation now, for the upper story had a good deal to do with my troubles. Two, three—still she did not come. Surely, she would pack? At least if she trusted to a disorderly huddling up of her clothes "anyhow"—she was scarcely the girl I took her for. No—of course she was hurrying in—just in time. I ran to her.

"Could you spare me a few moments—a hurried interview," I said, much agitated, "before you go? Five minutes would be sufficient."

"Bless you, my dear sir, I haven't five seconds. I must be at the train at four."

"Three minutes then," I said with reproach, "you have been very unkind to me lately, and I did think after the dressing case and the ladder——"

"I assure you," she said, "I meant nothing, never intended it, at least."

"No," said I, "it wasn't you. I know perfectly well who poisoned you—"

She colored a little.

"Let me," said I, passionately, "let me go up with you. I can go up stairs now. I have learned how."

"Go up stairs now?" she said, looking at me with wonder.

"Yes," I went on, "I have been training myself secretly, when you little thought what I was about. I began with one flight, then [illegible] by success, went on to two."

There was a rush behind me. "Bless you!" he said, "you haven't twenty minutes to get to the train. Where are the trunks and things?"

"Already," she said. "I am just going up stairs and shall be down in a second."

"Up stairs!" he said, "won't there the lift? We won't mind it," he added, laughing, "as it is the last time, and, besides, I have something to tell you privately."

I looked at her bitterly.

"You said you'd take the stairs, but no matter." I turned to go.

"Do come," he said, taking her hand and drawing her to the lift. "And as for you sir for God's sake keep off and stop worrying us."

She went with him. Suddenly she turned and said to me in a kind voice, "I am sorry to disappoint you, but if you have anything to tell or any message you can go round by the stairs and meet me at the top."

A capital idea. I gave her a look of intelligence, to show that I understood the terrorism under which she was acting. He slammed the door of the apparatus. They began to ascend, and I rushed round and began what was literally for me a terrific and daring ascent. I was racing against time. I took three stairs at each step. I believe there were four hundred in all. When I had done about two thirds of the way, I began to feel signs of distress. I was gasping, tottering, but I still held on. My training was failing me—my false, faithless, treacherous training. They would be gone—be down even before me. But I held on. At last I was at the top and O joy! there was she waiting patiently on the landing. She saw me come in panting, blowing, drooping with my head on one side and my tongue hanging out. I could have tumbled forward at her feet but caught the banister. Her face was all lit up with pleasure and delight and sympathy.

"Now," said she, "I can give you a minute while Mr Ridley has gone to see about the trunks. What do you want?"

"You!" I gasped out, with a sort of blow and guggle.

"Me," she said, starting back.

"Yes," I said, "you must have seen it long ago—Oh! my (I shall never get over it) [illegible] pulmonary. Deck of a vessel! I have a good competence and shall make you ha—ha—happy. Oh! I have no wind."

She burst out laughing. "My dear sir this is so kind and flattering, and I assure you I appreciate it. But it is so unfortunate, you are a little bit late, Oh! ever so little."

"Late," I cried, holding my side and gasping.

"Yes," she said, "Mr Ridley has been a little before you."

"Before me!" I cried, starting back. "When? where? how?"

"Only two seconds ago," she said, hanging down her head, but from a different cause to that which affected mine. "He has just proposed for me in the lift."

"In the lift!" I cried with a stamp. "Oh, infernal hydraulic power! Oh, wretched apparatus!"

"It was so fortunate," she went on, "if I had gone up by the stairs with you it perhaps might never have occurred. Every hotel should have a lift."

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM!

The Remedy for Curing

CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS, Asthma, Croup,

Diseases of the Throat, Bronchitis, Pains and Oppression of the Chest and Lungs, Difficult Breathing and all the Diseases of the Pulmonary Organs.

ITS ACTION IS EXPECTORANT, ALTERATIVE, SUDORIFIC, SEDATIVE, DIAPHORETIC AND DIURETIC, which renders it one of the most valuable remedies known for curing diseases of the lungs. It excites expectoration, and causes the lungs to throw off the phlegm or mucus, CHANGES THE SECRETIONS AND PURIFIES THE BLOOD, heals the irritated parts, gives strength to the digestive organs, brings the liver to its proper action, and imparts strength to the whole system. Such is the immediate and satisfactory effect, that it is WARRANTED TO BREAK UP THE MOST DISTRESSING COUGH IN A FEW HOURS TIME, if not of too long standing. IT IS WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction even in the MOST CONFIRMED CASES OF CONSUMPTION. IT IS WARRANTED NOT to produce costiveness (which is the case with most remedies) or affect the head, as it contains no Opium in any form. IT IS WARRANTED TO BE PERFECTLY HARMLESS to the most delicate child, although it is an active and powerful remedy for restoring the system. THERE IS NO REAL NECESSITY FOR SO MANY DEATHS BY CONSUMPTION, when ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM will prevent it if only taken in time.

"CONSTITUTION WATER,"

THE ONLY REMEDY FOR DISEASES OF THE

BLADDER, KIDNEYS,

Gravel, Dropsical Swellings,

GENITAL DEBILITY, ETC.

THE ASTONISHING SUCCESS WHICH HAS ATtended this invaluable medicine renders it the most valuable one ever discovered. No language can convey an adequate idea of the immediate and almost miraculous change which it occasions to the debilitated and shattered system. In fact, it stands unrivalled as a remedy for the permanent cure of the maladies above mentioned, to wit:

DIABETES, IMPOTENCY, LOSS OF MUSCULAR ENERGY, PHYSICAL PROSTRATION, INDIGESTION, SEMINAL WEAKNESS, GLEET, FLUOR ALBUS.

And in every disease in any way connected with the disorder or decay of the Procreative Functions. Persons about to marry, if conscious of any weakness, should take the

CONSTITUTION WATER,

Whether broken down by excess, weak by nature, or impaired by sickness, the unstrung and relaxed organization is at once braced, revivified and built up. Well may this celebrated medicine be called the

MEDICAL WONDER.

The stooping, trembling victim of depression and debility becomes a new man. He stands erect, he moves with a firm step, his mind, which was previously sunk in gloom or an almost idiotic apathy, becomes bright and active, and he goes forth a regenerated man, conscious of new vigor. The medicine reaches the CONSTITUTION itself and restores it to its normal condition.

IRRITATION OF THE NECK OF THE BLADDER, INFLAMMATION OF THE KIDNEYS AND CATARRH OF THE BLADDER, STRANGUARY AND BURNING OR PAINFUL URINATING, CALCULUS, GRAVEL, BRICK DUST DEPOSIT AND MUCOUS OR MILKY DISCHARGES AFTER URINATING.

For these diseases it is truly a sovereign remedy, and too much cannot be said in its praise. A single dose has been known to relieve the most urgent symptoms. TRY IT in these cases and you will ever give praise to

CONSTITUTION WATER.

Males or Females,

Are you troubled with that distressing pain in the small of the back and through your hips? CONSTITUTION WATER will relieve you like magic.

I AM STILL COMPELLED TO ACCEPT OF LEGAL TENDER NOTES AT PAR (and have been since [illegible] 17 1862) for the rent of my Iron Front Brick Store, corner of Morrison and Front streets. I feel compelled to announce for the benefit of the public at large that leased the building of me on the 17th day of February 1862 for a term of years, at which time there was no such currency in vogue, and it was understood the terms were CASH. Since the date above stated I have received the depreciated currency regularly under protest for the rent of the

CITY OF PARIS STORE,

Making less than [illegible] of the real amount [illegible] Mayer was to pay. He had secured the building at very advantageous rates and even were he now to comply with his contract and pay in COIN would be getting the best bargain in the city. I make this statement to show the public what kind of a man he must be to take such undue advantage of the times to convert a few dollars to himself by LEGAL SWINDLING. The public can readily see what it costs to have such tenants.
